The Strange discovery of a Fisherman Yesterday Morning,

Yesterday morning Coroner Drexel the river, at a point several hundred rods south of Boyd's packing house. He immediately went down to the place and found a curious crowd of spectators in the house, that of John Green, near the stone quarry, on the isthmus. It was expected that the road Crossings-Goodman, Thrane and where the child lay.

It seems that a fisherman by the name of Joseph Kanina had been fishing out was displayed by the French than the Colombisome trot lines in the river about nine ans. The latter understood the cause of the proo'clock this morning, when he spied a small basket, filled with bricks and partially covered with a piece of calloo dress, in which there was swaddled an infant, apparently two or three days old. The basket was almost on the bank and had evidently been thrown into the water at some point far above and been washed down the river and ashore by the heavy currents.

The ignorant fisherman was considerbly stunned by his strange discovery, but gave currency to the report which soon reached the coroner.

An inquest was hastily held, and the jury after hearing all the meagre evidence in the case, returned a verdict that the "child had come to a violent death by being threwn into the Missouri river by some person or persons naknowa." There is not much light to be thrown upon the mystery. J. B. Haugh, a rest dent of the bottoms, testified at the inwere appropriately referred.
